Identify What Matters Most

Incorporate you family and loved ones into each an every stage of your life, whether it's ascending, leveling off, or descending.

Learn to take the excitement of your career and public pursuits into your home and share it with those who are committed to you and your well-being. They want to be part of whatever it is you are going through if you will only let them. Focus on relationships first. Take time with the ones you love instead of time with ones you can barely tolerate! There's an often-repeated quote in Mario Puzo's The Godfather that one should keep friends close and enemies closer, but that's not the way of the true God. Keep you friends close and your family even closer.

Like the pilot who has trouble connecting the moving vehicle with the stable ground, you need direction from the control tower. I believe that God is in the tower to help you regain alignment. You spiritual life can assist you in finding a stable place to balance your turbo-charged life. Emphasizing the spiritual can help you fit into a world that you may feel disconnected from or only mildly involved in.

This is why I believe that faith is so critical. Only God, who sits in the control tower, can show you how to realign what you did in the air with who you are at home. If is through spiritual direction that you will be positioned for a safe and satisfying landing—a landing into the welcoming arms of a life that is not dependent on what you have accomplished materially or publicly. I am talking about someone who waits for you and sees you as more than what fans or coworkers see. These are not colleagues who love you for what you do. These are people who value you for who you are. It is with them that you want to land. But you cannot land if you haven't any runway left to hold you as you come in for a landing. What will it profit you to gain this whole world and lose your soul? If you lose those you love, what good are all the rest of your accomplishments?
