Big U.S. Companies You Might Not Know Are Religious

By Max Nisen | Business Insider

Talking about religion and politics can be dangerous among friends. It's doubly so for businesses. That double-edged sword became crystal clear last year after Chick-fil-A's COO made comments about the chain's opposition to gay marriage. It sparked a massive backlash from the media, gay and lesbian couples, and even the mayor of Boston. The controversy also helped the company shatter sales records after former Arkansas governor and Fox commentator Mike Huckabee organized a "Chick-fil-A appreciation day." Many other big companies in America are also religious, including some that might surprise you.

Forever 21 prints a reference to one of the most oft quoted passages of the New Testament on the bottom of all of its bags. Purchase a skimpy $15 top or $19 skirt from trendy but budget-conscious clothing retailer Forever 21 and you may notice "John 3:16" printed on your shopping bag. Printed on the bottom of each of the store's bags, the biblical reference is perhaps the most obvious reference to the religious beliefs promoted by the store's owners, the Chang Family, who are born-again Christians. Mrs. Chang told Bloomberg Businessweek last year that the store had religious roots, citing that "God told her she should open a store and that she would be successful." The store provoked criticism in the summer of 2011 when it released a slew of religious-themed tees emblazoned with slogans such as "Jesus ♥ You" and "Holy."

Tyson Foods employs 1290 office chaplains to provide "compassionate pastoral care" to employees. Many customers may not realize it, but Tyson Foods is a very religious company that embraces spirituality in the workplace. Founder John Tyson speaks openly about his Christian beliefs, and the company's core values say that it "strive(s) to honor God" and "be a faith-friendly company." Since 2000, the company has employed approximately 120 office chaplains who are there to provide "compassionate pastoral care" to employees, according to Tyson's website.

Interstate Batteries includes references to the glory of God alongside its products in its online mission statement. Interstate Batteries speaks to its own religious identity in its mission statement. According to the company's website, the mission is "to glorify God as we supply our customers worldwide with top quality, value-priced batteries, related electrical power-source products, and distribution services." Former Company President Norm Miller was recognized last year by Dallas Baptist University for "his strong Christian leadership at Interstate Batteries as well as in the community."

The Trijicon sight pictured here has a coded reference to Bible verse John 1:7. Weapons-sight maker Trijicon made waves in 2010 when an ABC Nightline investigation found that the company had inscribed coded biblical references on high-powered rifle sights used by the U.S. military. Military officials told ABC they were unaware of the inscriptions, which violated U.S. military rules banning the proselytizing of any religion in Iraq or Afghanistan. The Michigan-based company at the time acknowledged the codes and told ABC that the practice started under its founder, Glyn Bindon, a

PennDOT, Police Partner for Independence Day Impaired-Driving Enforcement

6/28/2013

Officers Also Continue Boating Under the Influence Enforcement

Harrisburg – In an effort to keep Pennsylvania roadways safe during the Independence Day holiday period, PennDOT and law enforcement agencies across the state are partnering to crack down on impaired drivers.

The initiative is part of a national "Drive Sober or Get Pulled Over" enforcement effort which runs through July 8.

In addition to stepped-up enforcement on roadways, the Pennsylvania Fish & Boat Commission (PFBC) reminds people taking to the state's waterways that Waterways Conservation Officers will be on the lookout for impaired watercraft operators through the boating season.

"The Independence Day holiday is a time to celebrate with friends and family, but we should always celebrate safely," PennDOT Secretary Barry J. Schoch said. "No matter whether you're driving a vehicle or a boat, never drive under the influence of drugs or alcohol. Designate a driver ahead of time or arrange for a ride home."

According to PennDOT data, there were 355 alcohol-related crashes and 20 fatalities in those crashes from Friday, June 29, to Sunday, July 8, last year. This is an increase from 2011, when there were 325 crashes and 14 fatalities from Friday, July 1, through Sunday, July 10.

PFBC data shows that 60 people were arrested for boating under the influence in 2012. BUI penalties can include jail time and fines.

"Operating a boat or other watercraft when you've been drinking creates a danger for everyone on the water," Fish and Boat Commission Executive Director John Arway said. "Alcohol impairs your ability to operate a boat safely. For the safety of all individuals on the water, please do not operate your boat, jet ski, canoe or kayak if you've been drinking."

The legal blood-alcohol content in Pennsylvania is 0.08 for motorists over the age of 21. For underage drivers, the blood-alcohol limit is 0.02 percent. DUI penalties can include jail time, license suspension and fines of between $500 and $5,000.

"Our enforcement efforts play a key role in protecting the public, but we need the cooperation of every motorist to put an end to impaired driving," State Police Commissioner Frank Noonan said. "Each individual has a responsibility to stay out of the driver's seat if he or she is impaired by alcohol or other drugs."

Pennsylvania's DUI Task Force, the Pennsylvania State Police and local law enforcement statewide will conduct checkpoints and roving patrols as part of the impaired-driving crackdown. Funding comes from part of PennDOT's statewide distribution of $4.2 million in federal funds from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

devout Christian who was killed in a 2003 plane crash.

ServiceMaster's core commitment is to "honor God in all we do." Master may not be a household name, but several of its brands — which include Merry Maids, Terminix and American Home Shield — are. Former Minor League Baseball player Marion E. Wade founded the company in 1929 and worked to incorporate his "strong personal faith and a desire to honor God in all he did," according to the Service Master website. This translated into the company's "foundational commitment" to "Honor God in all we do."

Mary Kay founder Mary Kay Ash attributed her success to her company's commitment to God. In a 1997 interview Mary Kay Ash, founder of the cosmetics behemoth of the same name, attributed her company's success to the choice to "take God as our partner." She expounded on these views in her biography, "Mary Kay: You Can Have it All," where she stated, "God has blessed us because our motivation is right. He knows I want women to be the beautiful creatures he created." The religious bent has caused controversy from some of the company's salespeople, who have said it promotes a cult-like environment.

Curves founder Gary Heavin is an outspoken Christian and supporter of conservative and religious causes. Curves gyms are nationally known for creating a men-free environment where women of all shapes and sizes can work out. It's lesser known that the company's founder Gary Heavin, is a born-again Christian who has garnered criticism for conservative political views and donating to anti-abortion causes, according to a 2004 Houston Chronicle profile. Heavin acknowledged there has been some business "fallout" from his views, which prompted some members to cancel memberships.

The founder Tom's of Maine is a Harvard Divinity school graduate who emphasizes his faith in his business. Tom's of Maine, a natural products retailer best known for its toothpaste, is not that outwardly religious. But its founder Tom Chappell is an active Episcopalian, who graduated from Harvard Divinity School. Chappell discusses his path from divinity school to business CEO in his book, "The Soul of a Business: Managing for Profit and the Common Good." While at the school, a professor recommended that he treat his business like a ministry, so that's what he did. It has worked its way into Tom's mission statement, which says it exists, in part, "To help create a better world by exchanging our faith, experience, and hope."

Timberland CEO Jeff Swartz says his Jewish faith motivated him to sever ties with a Chinese factory. Timberland CEO Jeff Swartz is well-known for his commitment to promoting corporate social responsibility. For example, Swartz moved to sever the company's ties with a Chinese factory where human rights violations were allegedly occurring despite the fact that it took a hit to the shoe making company's bottom line. Swartz attributed his motivation to his own personal Jewish faith in a 2008 Fast Company profile. "I can't show you the scripture that relates to the rights of a worker, but I can show you text that insists upon treating others with dignity," he said. "It says in the Hebrew Bible one time that you should love your neighbor as yourself, but it says dozens of times that you shall treat the stranger with dignity."
